Scenario:

Molly is a junior CCI student at UNC Charlotte. She's currently working an internship at an A.I. Machine Learning company, but she's also looking for full-time jobs closer to Charlotte that allow her to learn the process of teamwork, along with working alongside computer science students since she mostly works at her office for this internship. She also wants to find a company that has a global perspective on the ethical issues of artificial intelligence. Luckily, her friends on social media introduced her to the Student Success app, which allows her to find internships and full-time jobs, along with different types of resources that allow her to research more on A.I., and find jobs with a collaborative work environment.

After she downloads the app and makes an account with her information, she has to put whether she wants an internship or a full-time job on the app, and it gives her different options on what computer science field she wants a job in. Since Molly's interested in artificial intelligence, she scrolls through the artificial intelligence field and finds lots of jobs close to home, along with jobs she feels she's qualified for. She immediately fills out her resume, cover letter, and other documents, along with lots of other information that different artificial intelligence agencies want. A few weeks later, Molly gets a call from 4 different companies, all saying that they want to interview her.

User Story:
As a student, I want to find a full-time job in artificial intelligence in order to apply all of the skills and knowledge I've learned from my machine learning internships.

Feature List:
- Feature to create an account and enter important information
- Filter to determine whether you're looking for internships or full-time jobs
- Different filters representing the different types of jobs, such as cybersecurity, data science, etc.
- Features that allow you to find different resources and tips to help you prepare for the job, such as interview tips, coding websites, etc.
- Feature that allows you to upload resume, cover letter, and other documents that help you with internships and full-time jobs
- Feature that allows you to save specific jobs in case you want to find them again later